

TYPES OF NASAL TUBES

Nasogastric tube	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Tube inserted into a nostril and advanced down the throat to the esophagus and then the stomach.</li> <li>• Frequently used for home enteral nutrition.</li> <li>• Allows feeding and medication to be administered directly into the stomach.</li> <li>• Can be installed and replaced by the parent, depending on the child's condition and if they have been taught by the healthcare team.</li> </ul>	 A line drawing of a human torso from the neck to the waist. A purple tube is shown entering the nostril, passing through the throat, and ending in the stomach. A label 'STOMACH' with a line points to the stomach area.
Nasoduodenal tube	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Tube inserted into a nostril and advanced down the throat to the esophagus, the stomach and then to the first part of the small intestine (duodenum).</li> <li>• Allows feeding directly into the duodenum (bypassing the stomach).</li> <li>• Allows the administration of medication directly into the duodenum as needed.</li> <li>• Can only be installed and replaced by the healthcare team.</li> </ul>	 A line drawing of a human torso from the neck to the waist. A purple tube is shown entering the nostril, passing through the throat, and ending in the first part of the small intestine (duodenum). A label 'DUODENUM' with a line points to the duodenum area.
Nasojejunal tube	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Tube inserted through a nostril and advanced down the throat to the esophagus, the stomach and then to the second part of the small intestine (jejunum).</li> <li>• Allows feeding directly into the jejunum.</li> <li>• Allows medication to be administered directly into the jejunum as needed.</li> <li>• Can only be installed and replaced by the healthcare team.</li> </ul>	 A line drawing of a human torso from the neck to the waist. A purple tube is shown entering the nostril, passing through the throat, and ending in the second part of the small intestine (jejunum). A label 'JEJUNUM' with a line points to the jejunum area.